COMPILED BY LUIS R. RIGUAL

Designer Holly Hunt sold her eponymous multimillion dollar company to Knoll in 2014 for $95 million. She currently runs House of Hunt, which produces bespoke interiors, architecture, and product design.

On the Record

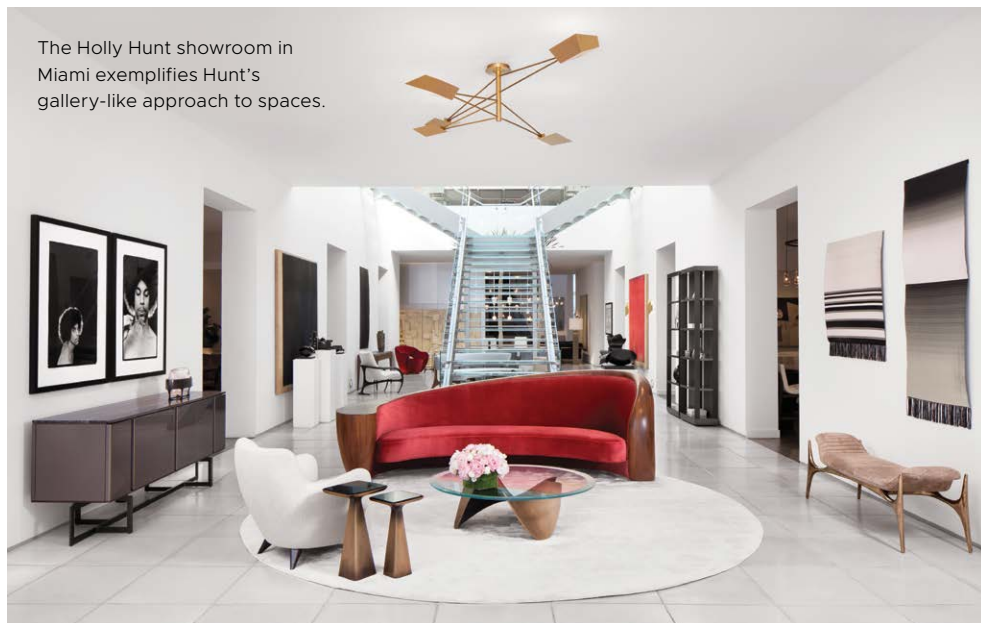

A NEW BOOK BY TASTEMAKER HOLLY HUNT TOUCHES ON 40 YEARS OF STYLISH DESIGN

ABOVE: Hunt's new monograph features 264 pages highlighting the designer's various projects.

Since making her debut on the design scene in the 1980s, designer Holly Hunt has been revered for gallery-like showrooms that effortlessly pair high-end furnishings and art. Equally respected have been her design lines, which, to this day, focus on craftsmanship, exacting proportions, and top-of-the-line materials. On shelves this October, Holly Hunt: Fearless in the World of Design (Rizzoli) looks back at 40 years of Hunt's accomplishments: the furniture, lighting, and textile collections she's created, the partnerships with the designers she's championed and introduced to American audiences, and the various places she has called home (including her never-before-published "modernist masterpiece" retreat in Aspen). rizzoli.com

Glass Acts

Ruvati's new Murano Collection of sinks includes a seashell design in pearl white (ABOVE), a circular version in black (RIGHT), and a seashell version in brown (BELOW).

Murano is to glass what caviar is to food. The mere mention of the name instantly denotes legacy, pedigree, and superior artistry. Ruvati's new Murano Collection of hand-blown glass sinks certainly lives up to that description. The new line offers two styles: a sleek circular basin and a seashell design in vivid colors of blue, green, brown, or black with a glossy finish that make them ideal choices for a standout powder room. ruvati.com
